THURSDAY, JUNE 24, 1915.

An Evening Echo.

No action, whether foul or fair, is ever done, but it leaves somewhere a record, written by fingers ghostly as a blessing or a curse, and mostly in the greater weakness or the greater strength, of the acts which follow it.

—LONGFELLOW.

Laussing gets the portfolio and the John W. Davis boom was only a flash. Such is life.

Grandfathers. Not So Bad After All.

Among the numerous hot spots President Wilson hurled at the Republican party not long ago was his remark that one of the principal faults of that party was that it "follows the advice of men old enough to be grandfathers."

Although he is himself grandfather to two children he probably does not feel so old, and sometimes forgets his accumulation of years and new relationships.

Most of the young men of the Republican party have been glad to take counsel of their elders, whether grandfathers or not. Youth for action age for advice. But recent events have doubly demonstrated the inappropriateness of the president's criticism. W. J. Bryan, who was chosen as the president's chief counselor, although old enough to be a grandfather, is younger by several years than Wilbur Ross, who occupied the same position in a Republican administration.

Certainly President Wilson's experience has not confirmed his prejudice against the counsel of old men and quite likely further reflection will cause him to change his mind as to the capacity of grandfathers.

Large Imports Prevented.

New York importing firms have $30,000,000 worth of merchandise tied up in ports abroad because of the British commerce restrictions on goods made in Germany and Austria.

These importers have appointed a committee to take up the matter with President Wilson and to demand that these goods be released.

Many of the men appearing on this committee are known to the members of Congress as advocates of near free trade on goods competing with our own manufactures. They spent time and money when the Underwood law was being framed in lobbying for tariff reductions. But as the Democrats were framing an importers' tariff law, these men were "called in as advisors," and were not known as lobbyists. The Underwood-Simmons-Wilson tariff law gave them about what they wanted, but a higher power is delaying their enjoyment of the fruits of their iniquity. It looks like a judgment on them.

From Oregon alone more than 350 carloads of horses have been shipped to the European war zone. It is estimated that these sales brought into Oregon more than a million dollars.

Such a report, coming from the state farthest from the scene of conflict, indicates the extent to which sales of horses and other war supplies have helped turn the balance of trade in our favor, notwithstanding the broad demands of the secretary of commerce.

Watterson on Bryan.

Henry Watterson, great Democratic editor, makes the following scathing arraignment of William J. Bryan:

"Men have been shot and beheaded, even hanged, drawn and quartered, for treason less heinous. The recent secretary of state commits no merely treason to the country, but treason to the party and its official head. Whatever his motive, whether political or mercenary, it leaves him altogether indefensible and ignoble.

Yet it is wholly characteristic, unfeeling and disloyal by nature, inordinately selfish, avaricious, egotistical, without any sense of the true relations of life and duty, or decent regard for the fitness of things, this commonplace person by force partly of assertion and partly of circumstance gained the front of the stage and has contrived to retain his place there against delinquencies the like of which have submerged many a better man.

Going no further back than the Bannets will cause, when he entered into litigation with a widow for a share in an estate upon which he had no claim, and was duly, properly and lawfully thrown out of court, and coming down the last national Democratic convention, when to make a deadlock and secure his own nomination, he betrayed both his friends and his instructions, we find nothing in the career of Mr. Bryan to respect or admire.

He is one of the very few of our public men who have grown rich as an unsuccessful candidate for office. He has capitalized defeat, and made an asset of pretension. Even as Mr. Roosevelt has taken "righteousness" for his trade mark, and worked it for more than its value, has Mr. Bryan exploited his "ideas" in quest of sure and big game money. Primarily this latter is the key to his present proceeding. It is transparently a trick of the showman.

It is problematical whether Mr. Bryan can think that after this he may have any political future. That he might take the field next year against Mr. Wilson is consonant enough, alike with his ill-judging and colossal vanity. But outside the narrow range of his self-conceit, the idea is preposterous. The destiny of the Democratic party for good or ill is inextricably bound up in the Wilson administration. Mr. Bryan sees the main chance quite as clearly as Mr. Pecksniff was wont to see it:

"His name is Crummy, And he wants money."

That is the sum of it. With the mind of a Barnum and the soul of a Titmouse he waited for the opportune moment, and when it arrived he struck, wantonly and shamelessly. The circus tents flare for him. His treason to his country and his chief will be worth quite a hundred thousand dollars' cash in hand. We shall see whether he will throw any of his money away on a fool campaign for the presidency next year.

Pride and Prosperity.

"A wife must not be extravagant, nor a husband penurious. Let her help him to save his money." Justice Greenbaum, of New York.

Some people have the ability to save only when they do it in order to spend at once to satisfy their pride or self-indulgence, which is little better than not saving at all.

Their economy brings them no nearer the goal of prosperity and an independent income. They simply save and scrape in order to indulge in new and more expensive luxuries, or to keep up with others, and in consequence never build up a reserve upon which to draw in future days of need.

An editorial writer in a Des Moines newspaper utters this plaint:

"The problem of educating children, maintaining their health, meeting the cost of living and keeping up insurance, on ordinary wages, is one which is not easy of solution and every man of forty-five who has not a competence is not always at fault, by any means. The world would be infinitely better off economically, if it were not so hard for men who are not extravagant to make a mere living for their families."

There is truth in what this writer says. But we believe wonders can be accomplished by the right kind of co-operation between the home-between children and parents.

There is something to be said also in favor of swallowing pride, not trying forever to keep up either with "Lizzie" or the "Joneses," and making a really serious effort to save systematically to provide for a future capital of worth while proportions.

It is often found that people can save when they have to do so. The war in Europe is proving this. According to a correspondent, boys attending Berlin schools are now learning these ten commandments of thrift:

1. Everybody must save, for only if everybody saves will Germany's supplies hold out.

2. Waste no food, not even the most unimportant.

3. Take time for eating, and chew thoroughly.

4. Avoid all eating between meals.

5. Eat rye instead of wheat bread, and be economical with bread.

6. Be economical with butter, and eat cheese, fruit sauces and marmalade instead of butter.

7. Eat abundantly of fresh vegetables so as to save meat, fats and bread.

8. At table call for potatoes in the skin.

9. Buy chocolate and sweets and send to the soldiers at the front—we can gladly dispense with these things.

10. In all that you do, remember that you can contribute to the new Fatherland that we are all hoping for. Practice self-sacrifice and work.

The poor children of London are being taught to mend their own shoes. This is a part of the program of thrift adopted by the British authorities as a result of the war. Time and time again it has been proved that necessity is the mother of invention. Perhaps if the discouraged Iowa editor felt that he absolutely must save he would be able to do it.

esque province of Bukowina. Here are gathered together Poles, Germans, Magyars, Roumanians, Ruthenians, Jews, Armenians, Lipowans, Ceches, Bulgarians, Turks and Gypsies. Here do all the most picturesque racial elements of Europe meet and yet remain apart.

In Czernowitz, for example, every nationality has its own club or "house." Most elaborate is the Polish "house," with its great dance hall and theater where Polish plays are played and Polish music heard, while the drop curtain is painted with the German national "house," the courtyard of which might have been lifted bodily from old Nuremberg. Here, too, is a theater with its decorations in the heavy German style, and a restaurant where food abundantly the multifarious braus of the Fatherland.

Love of race and nationality and racial rivalry, perhaps, are typified in the national houses of Czernowitz; but there is little or no trace of enmity. For example, when a party of Poles enters the splendid garden of the Roumanian "house," the orchestra at once plays Polish airs in their honor. The richest of all the elements in Bukowina is that represented by the Greek Orthodox church, and it has built the most elaborate structure in Czernowitz. The vast palace of the archbishop, with its innumerable domes and towers and gables, typifies the power of this religious body. There is probably no more splendid hall in Europe than the one where the Greek Orthodox Synod meets. Its arches and arcades are of white marble, supported on black marble columns. The ceiling is deeply coffered and richly decorated in many colors. From the deep all solid alabaster. The windows are seen lovely views of the palace gardens and the far-reaching valley of Pruth.

The scenery of Bukowina is no less strikingly contrasted than its peoples. The province is set in a sort of bay in the great Carpathian mountain chain. Rich level farmlands are surrounded by vine-clad hills, and beyond these are forested mountain slopes and snowy peaks.

MECHANICAL ORCHESTRAS.

The one and two hour moving picture plays are bringing into use the mechanical orchestra, operated by one musician. The mechanical orchestra, which is also called the unit orchestra, is an elaborated form of the pipe organ. Several of the largest organ builders in the country are now engaged in the construction of these instruments. Each builder has some particular feature of individual design. Their cost may be as high as $50,000 although $30,000 is the highest price paid for any now in operation.

Small and simple in design, are being put in the smaller theaters for as little as $800. The music is far superior to that ordinarily hired in the cheap theaters. For the larger theaters, where several musicians are usually employed, the new instrument soon pays for the cost of installation in the salaries it saves.

OIL AND GAS

Interest in the town lot development at Evans City, Pa., is increasing, occasioned by a number of wells drilling in the sand or nearing the producing formation. Ryan and Company have drilled their well on the third sand and it produced 150 barrels the first 24 hours. It is still drilling and a second pay is expected at 33 feet in the sand and an increase in production.

On the west side of the town lot development Fowler and Company have drilled their test well in the Marshall lot 12 feet into the sand and it produced 75 barrels the first 12 hours. The fact that this well got the pay at 12 instead of 17 feet in the sand was something of a surprise. They will drill into the lower pay.

Plaisted and McCandless's No. 2 well on the Kriebitzberg 17 acres, is holding up at 200 barrels a day. Kelley, Goe and Company's well on the Michley lot is flowing at the rate of four barrels an hour. These are the largest wells in the town. The well on the Twenier lot, located 700 feet east of the initial well on the Church lot, is due to get the sand tomorrow. There are six or eight wells in the town starting to drill and six rigs building. The wells are now crowded so close together that it is possible to step from one rig to another. One would think that there is a veritable tank of oil under the town if one is to form an opinion for the number of wells drilling and starting. Even if this were true, the last wells completed will find that the first wells completed have drained its contents.

In the salt sand development at Rosedale Braxton county, W. Va., Matych and Wilkins have completed a second test on the C. N. Snodgrass lot and will not have better than a 5-barrel pumper. This pool is proving a disappointment. The old wells have declined and are now very light pumpers.

On Oil Rock run, Clay district, Wirt county, T. H. Lockhart has completed No. 7 on the C. E. Vandevender farm and has a duster in all sands. On Nutters Fork of Goose creek, two and one-half miles west of the Columbus Producing Company's production of the Williams Coal Company tract, the Carter Oil Company has drilled its No. 3 on the Winifrede Coal Company's property through and 350 feet below the Berea grit and found no oil, but has a fair gasser in the Berea grit.

In Cabin Creek district, Kanawha county, the Columbus Producing Company has started to drill No. 6 on the Williams Coal Company's tract. In the same district the United Fuel Gas Company is down 2,125 feet and fishing at its test on the Paint Creek Coal and Land Company's property. The South Penn Oil Company is drilling at 1,790 feet at its test on the Obley farm and fishing. The same company's test on the Coalburg Colliery Company's property is drilling at 1,400 feet. All are important tests.
